contemporary human rights challenges both at the national and global levels. The course was part of the department's initiative to offer value-added learning to students beyond the conventional curriculum. The value-added course spanned a period of 3 months, with classes scheduled twice a week. The course consisted of both theoretical and practical components, ensuring an interactive and participative learning experience for the students. The successful completion of the value added course on Human Rights highlighted the importance of such initiatives in bridging the gap between theoretical knowledge and practical application. In light of the positive response, the Department of Political Science plans to continue offering this course annually, with potential collaborations with human rights organizations to provide internships and fieldwork opportunities for students.
